teachers about an unplanned moment, a dilemma they faced, or a moment they wished had gone differently and use it as inspiration to perform improvised scenes and characters. The goal is to open the craft of teaching as a human centered endeavor, and counter the hyper-evaluative nature of the teaching profession. Our hope is that the stories and improvised scenes will explore the way teachers think and feel - and that things can be a little more complex and nuanced than people may assume in a world filled standardized tests and explicit objectives. The improvisers honor featured guest experiences, and do not "roast" anyone. The podcast featured 8 episodes recorded over two months and expenses included artist fees for improvisers as well as podcast editing and publication.
